

Lingying Zhao is an Extension specialist and assistant professor of Department of Food, Agricultural, and Biological Engineering at the Ohio State University. She conducts research and extension programs in air quality and emissions associated with animal feeding operations, indoor air quality, and ventilation for indoor environmental control. Lingying holds a Ph.D. degree in Agricultural Engineering from University of Illinois at Urbana- Champaign (UIUC), and M.S. and B.S. degrees in Bio-Environment Engineering from Beijing Agricultural Engineering University, China. Prior experience includes postdoctoral research associate with Department of Biological and Agricultural Engineering at UIUC, agricultural project engineer with American Technology Products, Inc., graduate research assistant at UIUC, and researcher at the National Bio-environmental Engineering Lab of the Ministry of Agriculture of China, Beijing, China.